Opportunity Power Lines

This is another approach that you can use to get interest with people you know or know of, but do not know how to ask them. This approach is called 3rd party referral and it is very effective when used correctly.

This is a psychological approach. First put the person that you know (example: business associate, vendor, attorney, accountant, etc.) or know of (example: dry cleaner, butcher, hair stylist, real estate agent, etc.) on a pedestal and complement them.

Example: Mary I respect you as my real estate agent. I have known you for years. I really need a favor. (you hesitate) Who do you know that needs to diversify their income, or supplement their income, or create a secondary income stream right now? It will not jeopardize anything that they are currently doing.

I am involved on the ground floor of a rapidly expanding growth company. I really hate to bother you but I need a favor. Who can you give me? You will now find out if the person you are talking to is interested themselves because they will ask you “Well what about me?” It is important that you do a take away at this point and don’t tell them very much. You would say something like “I didn’t know if the timing was right for you to capitalize on something like this, but this is big business.

When can we sit down for 15 minutes or have a teleconference with your undivided attention where I can give you the details? If they ask you if you can tell me anything else? Say yes. Everyone wants it, no one has it, and you can make a lot of money with it. We need to sit down as soon as possible so I can give you all of the details. This is big business. If they are not interested, that is a psychological rejection when you ask the person you know or know of for a favor. Rather than psychologically rejecting you twice, they will usually give you a lead. You are in a win-win situation; learn how to use this 3rd party referral technique with your own personality.
